

Call for proposals for a special issue of the British Journal of Sociology of Education

The British Journal of Sociology of Education typically publishes one special issue each year, and has an annual competition for special issue proposals.

Proposals should be clearly sociological in nature and address any area of education (including formal and informal sectors). Submissions can adopt theoretical, methodological, review-based and/or empirical angles and must clearly articulate how the overarching theme proposed will make a significant and lasting contribution to the field.

We are particularly keen to receive proposals that focus on topics that are at the leading edge of current debates and are clearly relevant to the journal's international readership. In addition, we particularly welcome submissions from editors/editorial teams who identify as from minoritised/ marginalised communities.

Please note that all British Journal of Sociology of Education special issues are advertised through an open call for papers.

Proposals should be no more than 1500 words and include: the topic of the proposed special issue; the research expertise and any previous editorial experience of the proposed editor/editorial team; and a provisional timetable for putting the special issue together.

Proposals should be submitted to Rachel Brooks, Chair of the Executive Editors (r.brooks@surrey.ac.uk) by 8th October of the relevant year. All proposals will be evaluated at the November meeting of the executive editors, and decisions communicated shortly afterwards. (We are happy to receive proposals throughout the year, but no decisions will be made until the following November.)
